KIVA Institute announces its series of its 2018 Awarding Officials' Certification Training Series beginning with a comprehensive course on the Indian Self-Determination Act. Federal Awarding Officials and their subordinates are required to attend required courses including the course on the Indian Self-Determination Act. Tribal officials must also attend this course to understand their rights under the Act.

Public Law 93-638, the Indian Self-Determination Education & Assistance Act is about Tribal Sovereignty. It is about the tribes' right to self-determination and self-sufficiency. It is about the tribes' right to assume direct control and operation of federal programs, and reshape the programs to meet their needs. The Act is a unique law that has been in place for over 40 years, yet many do not fully understand it and how to implement it.

KIVA provides the most comprehensive training on the Indian Self-Determination Act not found anywhere else in Indian Country. KIVA has unique, unmatched knowledge and expertise about the Indian Self-Determination Act. KIVA's founder and president was directly involved on the technical amendments to the law; and leading the development of the implementing regulations. He played a key role in developing the Department of Interior's Indian Self-Determination policies, including the Awarding Officials' Delegation of Authority. He will instruct this course.

Attendees will receive special insight on how to interpret the law and regulations; and how they can exercise their tribal rights under the Act. KIVA guarantees its courses and provides follow-up technical assistance to all its clients who attend KIVA's classes, at no additional cost.
